

To whom it may concern:

I am writing to encourage the FCC to continue its ban on the use of cell-phones on aircraft. Not all wireless devices are disruptive to other passengers, but those that involve voice contact certainly are. The relative measure of personal convenience that may be afforded to wireless-using passengers is not commensurate to the aggravation it will cause other passengers. While this is not a provable statistic, this is common sense. Please maintain the ban on cellphone use in aircraft.

Additionally, consider the fact that potentially dangerous people with short tempers (in the grocery store, on the freeways, parking lots, etc.) need very little to irritate them. Should they become enraged because someone is talking on their cell phone and disturbing their flight, innocent bystanders might be subjected to their rage. Please protect the citizens of the air. THANK YOU!
